Abstract (from 750 up to 1,300 characters in length)

The Abstract should contain the following elements:

- Purpose of the article
- Design/methodology
- Findings
- Research implications

Keywords: Keyword 1; Keyword 2; Keyword 3; Keyword 4; Keyword 5

1. Introduction

The introduction should include the justification for the choice of the research problem, the aim of the paper and a short indication of research method used. In the case of a paper presenting the results of empirical research, a research hypothesis is necessary. The last paragraph of the introduction should present synthetically overview of the paper, describing the content of the following sections.

References to the literature and citations should be used in terms of "author, year", according to the following examples:

- (Author, year of publication), e.g. (Clift, 2019, p. 1)
- (Two authors, year of publication), e.g. (Clift and Woll, 2012)
- (Organisation, year of publication), e.g. (European Commission, 2005)

2. Literature review

Literature review should be comprehensive and include the most important research in this area. Literature review must be carried out including the following issues: (1) outlining the existing state of knowledge based on different research results and concepts, (2) justification of the motivation for the research problem. A review of the literature should present the latest achievements in the field of research, focusing mainly on scientific journals with impact factor (indexed in WoS, Scopus indexed).

3. Research methodology (for research papers)

The research methodology should contain information on the data collection process (surveyed persons, materials and tools used for their collection as well as on the research procedure and the applied methods of data analysis. The choice of the empirical approach, its advantages and limitations should be commented upon. The information provided should be sufficient to allow other researchers to reproduce the findings or replicate the research.

4. Results (for research papers)

The purpose of the results analysis is to present original research results clearly and consistently, including appropriate interpretation of empirical findings.

FIGURES - Figures should be numbered with Arabic numerals (Figure 1) and should appear in the body of the manuscript e.g. (Figure 1). The titles of all figures should be provided below each figure.

TABLES - All Tables should be numbered in Arabic Numerals (Table 1) and should appear in the body of the manuscript, e.g. (Table 1). All table numbers and titles should appear above each table. Tables should be editable.

FORMULAS - To write formulas we use a mathematical formula editor (in MS Word it is called MS Equation). A formula must be centered, and its number in parentheses must be aligned right. Exemplified, the computations can be made by the following relation:

$$A_2 + B^3 = \sum x \quad (1)$$

where:

A –

B –

5. Discussion (for research papers)

The research findings should be critically verified against the theoretical background and referred to other authors. Discussion of results should include a comparison of results with previous studies (similar studies). However, this section should be limited to relevant studies. If possible, authors should also refer to alternative findings and critically assess the accuracy and reliability of the results obtained.

6. Conclusions

The summary should contain a general, synthetic overview of the research results. The author should present recommendations for practice or/and theory, specify research restrictions and indicate possible directions for further research.

References

The literature should be presented in the alphabetical order. It should include only the items cited in the paper. The literature cited should be scientifically sound, preferably indexed in the major database of peer-reviewed literature (indexed in Web of Science or Scopus). Providing the bibliography use the following examples given by type of publication:
